What are City & Guilds Professional Recognition Awards?

City & Guilds Professional Recognition Awards are progressive, competence-based leadership and management qualifications. There are four different levels of study which will be determined by the experience you have already gained. This experience can be gained professionally or in an adult volunteer role in a cadet unit or youth organisation.

Which level of award should I study?

The four levels of award correspond to the following kinds of responsibility:

- Level 4 ▸ First line manager
- Level 5 ▸ Line manager
- Level 6 ▸ Senior manager
- Level 7 ▸ Strategic leadership role

The level at which you study will be determined following an initial advice and guidance meeting with the City and Guilds Curriculum Manager.

Successful candidates come from a wide range of backgrounds, for example: IT manager, police officer, teacher, banker, town planner, electrical engineer, executive chef, security manager.

How are the awards completed?

No previous qualifications are required, nor is there any new learning. Instead, you have to demonstrate through reflective writing and supporting evidence that you have sufficient experience to justify your award. Put simply, you need to show us that you have the leadership and management experience required and provide real-life examples of your management actions.

What support is available?

We will provide you with resource materials and your own Cadet Vocational College mentor who will help you with deadlines and give advice on your work in two formal reviews as you progress.

What will I gain?

Successful graduates will have the opportunity to attend Cadet Vocational College's annual graduation ceremony. In addition to gaining a formal qualification, completing a PRA will also entitle you to use the appropriate post-nominal letters for the City & Guilds of London Institute.
